WINTER EXHIBITION

NATIONAL ACADEMY OF DESIGN

THE Winter Exhibition of the National Academy of Design, like the Corcoran Gallery's Fifth Biennial Exhibition, proved of exceptional interest and merit. It comprised 264 paintings and 107 works in sculpture. These were selected from 1,600 works submitted to the jury. A good many works which passed the jury were not exhibited on account of lack of space. Of the exhibits shown 74 were by academicians, 68 by associates and 229 non-members.

The Carnegie prize was awarded to Hayley-Lever, an Australian artist by birth, who purposes, however, becoming a citizen of the United States, for a painting entitled "Winter, St. Ives," illustrated herewith. The Thomas R. Proctor prize for the best portrait in the exhibition went to Wayman Adams for a portrait of Mr. Alexander Ernestinoff. The Isadore medal for the best figure composition was awarded to Charles W. Hawthorne for a painting entitled "Le Peignoir Rose." The Helen Foster Barnett prize for the best piece of sculpture by an artist under thirty-five years of age, was awarded to Louis J. Urich for a figure purposed as a table fountain.
